Colored men who ught their way into the church time after time after it was all over, yelling for relatives, were handled as gently as possible, but they were got out, and quickly. It was no place for mourners just then.

PRAYERS IN THE STREET.

All the while the screaming and praying west of Old women knelt in the street outside the church while the bodies were being taken out and prayed in shrill voices that carried for many blocks. The police couldn't well stop that, and they wouldn't have done it anyway for it seemed in the worst morphies of the aftermath to have a quieting effect on the thousands of negroes outside.

The policeman made one step into the chapel, and just then the whole back part of the church floor yawned and sank, not all at once, with one crash, but slowly. For a space of forty feet from the entrance to within three rows of pews from the front and from side wall to side wall the floor sagged downward as if a gigantic harmer had smashed it in with one blow.

FOLICEMAN TOO LATE. The policeman yelled and jumped back-ward just in time to save himself from sliding into the chasm. Preacher Jacobs had stepped out of the pulpit. He was caught in the swirl of falling bodies, jammed caught in the swirf of latting codes, jammed against a broken beam and badly hurt—one leg crushed and his head bruised. Luckily he was not carried downward, but was able to save himself by holding on to a pew.

One calm member of the church who was there said afterward of what followed that: "it was just hell." Men, women and whidere filling the power were helded into children filling the pews were hurled into the hole just as things are poured into a funnel. There was nothing to hold on to ank-pews, supports, chairs, everything

Those who were in the back part of the church were at the bottom of the heap. Many of those who slid downward upon them were hurt, but more were worse frightened than anything else. OVERCROWDING DID IT, INSPECTOR SAYS. Mr. Collins said that the church was examined by men in the department last August, when all the other churches in Brooklyn and the theatres were inspected The only fault found with it then was in regard to the rear exits from the second floor. These were too narrow, and the pastor promised to have them made larger. The inspector said the accident was evidently due to crowding. He said the pastor had told him that he had never had such a crowd in the churchb efore.

Many members of the Legislature who do not train with the Odell triumvirate are of the opinion that a plan is working by Mr. Odell and his triumvirate to chloroform the Stock Transfer Tax bill. They say if Gov. Higgins wants this bill he can have it, but that it must pass the Assembly first, so that Speaker Nixon's Assembly Committee on Rules shall not be permitted to place it on the ice during the closing days of the session.

A novel proposition for the control of the gas and electric lighting business of the State is contained in a bill that has been drawn by Assemblyman Merritt (Rep., St. Lawrence). It provides that the State Tax Commission may regulate the lighting interests of the State, and the commission is authorized to hear complaints and regulate the quantity and quality of gas that must be supplied by a corporation and is also to fix the rates.

Although Gov. Higgins in messages to the Legislature has come out for home rule, to-night the Assembly ignored that principle as affecting New York city. Assemblyman Wilsnack (Rep., Queens), introduced a bill saddling onto New York the State Training and Normal School in Queens borough, the bill being mandatory in its provisions and practically giving New York city no voice in the matter.

The manufacturer of a table delicacy hired five salesmen at $2500 a year each to introduce his article to the trade. At the same time it was explained to the representative of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL that there was no appropriation for advertising, as he did not have enough money. Salesmen were necessities, but advertising was a

It was proposed that he use four salesmen and put the $2500 thus saved into advertising in THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL on the theory that THE LADIES' Home Journal would sell more goods than the five salesmen, while strengthening the work of the other four.

The theory was sound, and proved itself so to the extent that in a short time he added new capital to the business and increased the advertising appropriation. He is now using large copy in THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and half-pages in other magazines. His goods are known the country over.

The manufacturer who was persuaded to spend one salesman in advertising has been compelled to give up altogether another business in which he was greatly interested, and which was then the larger proposition, to attend to the growing demands of the business that is being advertised.
